If things are building up in your life, commit to unbuilding the stuff that doesn't matter, so you have time to build up the things that do. 1. Identify the build-up and what's behind it. From books to kitchen utensils, gym clothes, or fancy shoes, we all have our areas of weakness. It could be something you've had for a long time, but can't part with or something new that you've been collecting. Once you recognize the build up, figure out why it's there. What's bugging you? 2.

When Things Build Up - Be More with Less

It's natural to want things to go back to the way they were before COVID-19. That desire, however, can lead people to make bad decisions, experts say.
